Feminist Journalism at Its Best

Local feminist newspapers exist throughout the United States, but a select few find the combination of original reporting, broad topical appeal, financial stability, and consistent quality necessary to achieve a national readership. New Directions for Women, the leading feminist newspaper in the United States, began inauspiciously in 1972 as a 14-page mimeographed newsletter in New Jersey; switched to tabloid format [that same year]; it was the nation's first statewide feminist newsletter. In 1975, it went national . . . and in 1980, changed from a quarterly to a bi-monthly. . . . News coverage extends to virtually all political, economic, medical, cultural, and social issues addressed by the movement, and international stories appear with increasing frequency. . . . Writing is even and skillful; the overall design — headlines, typography, page layouts — highly professional. Provides essential coverage of women-related news and belongs in every public and academic library with a diversified newspaper collection. (S.B.B.)

Statement of Purpose

New directions for Women is committed to publishing the many voices of feminism. We believe the diversity of the women's movement must be seen as one of its strengths.

New directions for Women is a national feminist periodical written for feminists and committed to reaching out to those not yet dedicated to a feminist future.

New directions for Women believes when we understand the pervasive force of sexism, we will act to effect change.

True emancipation begins neither at the polls nor in the courts. It begins in woman's soul.

The Birth, Success, Death and Lasting Influence of New Directions for Women (1972 - 1993 - ?)

By Paula Kassell
With invaluable contributions by Maurine Beasley, Phyllis Kriegel, Vivian Scheinmann, and Lynn Wenzel

The whole idea for starting New Directions for Women in New Jersey grew out of a conference of the same name held in the spring of 1971, sponsored by a coalition of women's rights groups in New Jersey. The proceeds of the conference ($240) were dedicated to starting a newspaper to "keep communicating" with the 300 women who had attended and to reach other potential feminists. Formerly a social worker and then a technical editor at Bell Telephone Laboratories, I was appointed editor and launched the publication with a volunteer staff in my Dover, New Jersey, home, working in two bedrooms furnished as offices and pasting up the newspaper on the dining-room table.

The first issue, the first statewide feminist periodical in the United States, came out in January 1972. Consisting of 14 mimeographed pages with a cartoon, it had a press run of 2,000 and was distributed, in addition to the feminist groups, to the presidents of as many different types of women's clubs in the state whose names we could get.

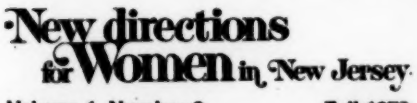
Vol. 1 Number 1 January 1972

That first issue was very well received and highly praised. And we thought we would just have to sit back and the subscriptions would come rolling in—that anybody reading it would be inspired to write us a check for $3 for a year's subscription. But unfortunately only 85 people were so inspired. (As we learned later, 4.25 percent was actually a respectable return.)

And it never even occurred to us that we should have an aggressive circulation promotion policy. We talked about getting advertising for future issues without knowing how to go about it.

So, although we were supposed to be a quarterly, eight months went by before the idea came to me that was to get us enough money to put out another issue.

I began to see that if real changes were ever to take place, the women's movement would have to back up into the school system with a vigorous attack on the way schools were shunting girls into certain occupations and boys into others, starting in the very early grades. We decided to put out an education issue in the Fall of 1972 and distribute it free at the state teachers' convention to push the idea of equality in vocational education.



Volume 1 Number 2 Fall 1972
through Volume 4 Number 1 Winter 1975

It was this burning desire to communicate our story to thousands of people that gave us our handle, both on increasing circulation and selling advertising. It suddenly came as a flash of inspiration that these two elements had to go together, that since we were distributing to teachers, librarians and library users, we had an ideal audience for book publishers. From this narrow base we were able to put together several hundred dollars worth of advertising from book publishers and a few feminist businesses.

We published an eight-page typeset tabloid with pictures, ordered a press run of 53,000, trucked it down to Atlantic City, and ended up with a deficit of only about $140.

The next issue, Winter 1973, was then created on the same principle. A special issue on employment and child care, we arranged to distribute it free to all members of the American Association of University Women and the Business and Professional Women in the state and the personnel managers of all the New Jersey companies employing 500 or more, a total of about 350 companies. This time we were able to sell several hundred dollars more in advertising than the previous issue, and this distribution increased our subscriber list several fold.

By 1975 we felt restricted in scope and potential subscribers by our statewide status, and decided to go national in coverage and circulation. We dropped "in New Jersey" from our logo. And with the Winter 1979-80 issue, we moved up to a bimonthly schedule after six years as a quarterly.

New directions for Women

Volume 4 Number 2 Spring 1975
through Volume 20 Number 4 July/August 1991

Our idealism was the secret of our success. New Directions for Women and all periodicals are always faced with two questions: Whom do we reach? What do they want to know? The marketplace gives one answer, of course—the only answer sought by periodicals whose purpose is to make money. But New Directions for Women was organized as a nonprofit corporation run by an unpaid board of trustees. It always had to be operated in a businesslike manner—subscriptions and advertising space had to be sold or the bills would not be paid and the venture would fail and disappear. But earnings and contributions were devoted solely to carrying out its ambitious objectives. Here is the "Statement of Purpose" published in the Fall 1972 issue:

New Directions for Women is a consciousness-raising organ published to inform women about equal rights.

New Directions for Women is directed to all women, not just feminists.

It is filled with hard news and reports on the issues that concern women rarely found in the standard press.

It is written to energize women to take action to advance their position.

New Directions for Women believes that when women understand sex discrimination, they will reach for the tools to combat it.

The key to the whole operation is to be found in the second paragraph of the "Statement of Purpose": "New Directions for Women is directed to all women, not just to feminists." We always tried to reach women who did not yet quite understand the feminist movement, a lack of understanding that often leads to fear.

Since its beginning in the mid-60s, the feminist movement has suffered from inadequate and inaccurate reporting and false interpretation by the standard media. The first and most notorious instance was the report that bras were burned in a demonstration at a Miss America contest in 1968. This episode NEVER TOOK PLACE, yet feminists are still trying to live down the epithet "bra burner." The important reason for the action that DID take place—girdles, bras and lipsticks were tossed in a barrel as symbols of the unnatural distortions of body, face, and mind that constrict women.

Page after page could be filled with further examples of inept or distorting coverage (or noncoverage) of women's events and issues in books, newspapers, magazines, radio and TV—and perhaps especially in advertising.

New Directions for Women was founded because constant, accurate, in-depth coverage of the issues as they surface and develop is possible only in a woman-run publication; our activism and contacts with feminists and feminist groups throughout the country enabled us to scoop the mainstream press time after time.

An excerpt from a successful subscription promotion letter of the mid-1970s tells the heart-warming story of our inspiration and devotion:

RECIPE [By Brenda Turner]
1 cup crushed ego
1 teaspoon job discrimination
1/4 teaspoon chauvinism
1 well-beaten path to the washing machine
1/2 teaspoon grated nerves
1 pinch from a man in the street
1 dash from the dentist to the babysitter

Mix all ingredients, one on top of the other, and stir violently. Cook until you feel a slow burn and add one last straw.

Serves: 53 percent of the population Women are becoming aware of the ingredients that make up their daily lives, and many questions are rising to the surface.

The staff of New Directions for Women is dedicated to finding some answers and creating a newspaper that will affect every woman who reads it. . . . That is why we are trying to reach the woman who recognizes herself as a person, with her own rights even though she may have heavy responsibilities for others.

New Directions for Women, a nonprofit organization, is funded by subscriptions, advertising, a federal grant, and donations from feminist groups and individuals who want news about the women's movement to reach more women.

Of course, we rely heavily on advertisements, but we do have a firm policy to never accept one that we do not believe would be of positive value to our readers.

Most of our staff are volunteers: teachers, homemakers, lawyers, politicians, and secretaries, who joined us after reading New Directions for Women. Many are professional writers or artists who donate their work to us because they know they are helping other women.

The unusual dedication of the staff is one of the reasons why our subscribers feel a personal relationship with the women whose words they are reading.

We are reaching intelligent, concerned, involved women. A survey of our readers indicates that 79 percent are college educated, and 60 percent of these have continued their schooling in postgraduate work. 66 percent of our readers are employed full- or part-time. 49 percent are married.

In the survey our readers most often voted for our articles about Legal Rights, Job Opportunities, Legislation, and New Life Styles.

We are not afraid to publish articles on controversial subjects. . .

"Volunteerism—The Still Sizzling Bomb." The debates and demerits of volunteering, and the difference be-tween unpaid work that is "service-oriented" and "change-directed."

"Conference MDs Equate menopause With Sickness."
A report on the meeting that prompted our series on the menopause.

"How to Say No to a Rapist." There are two schools of thought: some believe a woman should resist violently; others say a woman must try to appease a rapist.

In the very first issue (January 1972) we reviewed 1971 rulings about abortion in New Jersey; told of President Richard Nixon's veto of a comprehensive child care bill that had passed both houses of Congress after much lobbying by women's groups (To this day 23 years later Congress has not passed another). The Spring and Summer 1993 issues carried helpful articles about divorce and alimony written by an attorney. Coverage of domestic violence started in 1976. Almost every issue from the beginning delineated the pervasive discrimination against women in employment but stressed earning money and getting ahead as the basis of women's liberation. Not forgetting the housewife, the Winter 1973 issue assessed her economic value in view of the 12 jobs she filled, which came to $1,000 per month in 1972 dollars for the more than 28 million working at the job.

Throughout its life the paper acted as a consciousness-raising conduit to the women's movement, covering the issues, always giving names and addresses of organizations to help women get involved and become activists. At the same time every issue had helpful information about personal problems—alcoholism starting in the Spring 1973 issue, sexual harassment as early as the Spring 1979 issue, questioning estrogen use in Summer 1974. Older women were given regular coverage starting with the Winter 1974 issue, and in 1978 Prime Time, a newsletter for older women, was absorbed by New Directions for Women, and coverage of aging and agism was increased.

The women who managed and wrote for the paper through the years were as varied as the people who read it, most strikingly in the age range—from the teens through the 70s. Many of the writers and staff gained professional stature and self-confidence. Learning to put out the paper was a growth experience no matter what the age or background. It would be safe to say that no women who gave herself to the venture was untouched by the experience.

The same could be said for hundreds, perhaps thousands, of New Directions for Women readers, judging by the flood of letters they sent throughout the years: "My feelings about myself have changed since I've read this paper." "Your paper has been most helpful to me in determining my future goals in life." "After reading your publication, I am sure I will find a way I might be able to assist in the efforts of other women." (This letter illustrates the conduit to activism at work.)

Now that I've painted that rosy picture, I must admit there are two very serious flaws in it.

We survived only because, through most of our years, the staff was almost entirely unpaid, and all the writers gave us their work free, even some professionals. They worked for New Directions for Women for nothing because of their strong convictions of its importance to the women's movement. But their regular jobs took precedence regardless of our deadlines. We had to increase our budget several fold to pay for staff work, pay our reporters, and pay for creative work (verse, cartoons, drawings and photographs).

The financial problem was tied in closely with our other major serious difficulty. Among the hundreds of women who have written or worked for New Directions for Women hardly anyone aside from myself took responsibility for the business side of the publication, the areas usually under the jurisdiction of the publisher rather than the editor.

Recognizing the imperative for women to face and learn to operate in the business world, in 1976 New Directions for Women organized a conference, "New Directions for Women in the Media: How to market Your Executive Talents and Your Writings in Books, Newspapers and Magazines." This conference also featured presentation to five women of the "New Directions for Women Positive Image of Women Award" and presentations of awards to the winners of our first essay contest, "A High School Student Looks at Equal Rights for Women." The second essay contest, in 1982, on the subject "What Do You Have to Say About Feminism," was a double contest—for women never before published, and for high school students. The third essay contest, in 1989, called a "feminist essay competition," specified "You may write about anything you wish, but it must be from a personal perspective."

We tried to use the media conference to recruit women to help on our business side, but this did not work out.

In spite of our business-side staffing problem, in its first few years the publication expanded in size, reaching 20 pages by November 1975. The size of each issue depended on the advertising space sold; the printing bill for each issue was covered by its ad revenue. Since paid subscribers now numbered in the thousands, and tens of thousands of copies of each issue were distributed free for circulation promotion, the ad rate was raised to $400 per page.

Our ad rate structure was unusual, devised in 1972 by my son, who was in advertising. On the assumption that most of the ad spaces we sold would probably be eight column inches or less, we needed to promote maximum revenue from small ads. So, rather than the usual flat rate per column inch, it was based on a sliding scale (the larger the ad, the lower the rate per inch). Advice from a woman buying advertising space for a major book publisher suggested a saleable price for a typical book ad in a periodical such as ours, and the rates above and below were extrapolated from that marker. Prices ranged from the minimum size offered (2 column inches) for $30 to a full page (a total of 80 column inches) for $320. My knowledgeable son's theory proved to be correct, and the sliding scale was retained as the full-page rate was raised:

to $400 per page in 1975 (circulation promised: 30,000, except education and book issue: 50,000) to $500 per page in 1976 (same circulation figures)
to $550 in 1987 (circulation promised: 55,000)
to $600 in 1991 (circulation promised: 65,000)
to $675 in 1992 (same circulation figure).

Subscription rate changes were much more modest to keep the paper as affordable as possible. When we published our first issue in 1972, New Directions for Women (then a quarterly) was $3 per year. In 1987 we increased the price to $4 per year, or $1 per issue. When we went bimonthly in 1980, our annual rate went to $6, the price per issue remaining $1. Because of skyrocketing increases in the costs of doing business (printing, postage, mailing services), we raised the subscription rate to $10 per year in 1982.

Starting to pay the staff in the mid-1980s increased the budget by $1,000 an issue, and the subscription price was raised to $12 per year in 1989. In the late 1980s we started to pay writers (who got two cents a word), artists, and photographers, and in 1993 the subscription rate was raised to $16.

During the seven years that New Directions for Women was published in my home, I employed one paid clerk-typist, half-time. Late in 1975 we obtained a federal Comprehensive Education and Training Act (CETA) grant administered by the county for one full-time employee, salary and payroll taxes paid. We contracted to train a woman in the business side of publication and put the new staff member to work soliciting advertising and writing subscription and renewal letters. Since so much of the work involved book advertising, at the end of the grant period she found a responsible supervisory position in the advertising/publicity department of a book publisher.

By 1977 I was suffering from a painful muscle spasm in my back, diagnosed as due to tension, and could no longer take responsibility for editing and publishing the paper. The offices were moved to rented quarters in Westwood, New Jersey, initially setting up with borrowed card tables and chairs. Several volunteers who lived nearby agreed to run the paper cooperatively. Decisions were made by an editorial board and a board of trustees. I remained a member of both boards and continued to write for the paper. By 1978, after some of the women started full- or part-time paid employment, Vivian Scheinmann was appointed managing editor, with overall responsibility for both the business and editorial aspects. Scheinmann had a Masters in Library Service from Columbia University and administrative business experience. She had been children's book editor and then book editor of New Directions for Women.

"In retrospect," Scheinmann says, "we were very courageous, considering we were working with an unsalaried staff and with minimal advertising. However, the consensus was that we had to grow or we would stagnate; we knew we would also have to expand our coverage and proceed to a bimonthly publishing schedule." (January/February 1980 was the first bimonthly issue.)

At the time of the move the paper had about 8,000 paid subscribers—one third on the east coast, one third on the west coast, and the rest scattered across the country in every state. It was also sold at feminist bookstores.

Additional CETA grants were obtained, continuing until 1980, to train five minority women and displaced homemakers in the publishing business. One was responsible for subscription records, one learned to sell advertising space and greatly improved the revenue, one was office manager, a fourth did clerical work, and the fifth learned to be the bookkeeper. The subscription base and readership grew as the CETA staff applied themselves to succeeding in their individual goals and in those we had set for the paper. When the CETA grants ended, three of the employees found jobs in the private sector doing work for which we had trained them, and two became paid employees of New Directions for Women.

Vivian Scheinmann expended much time and effort to find new grant money. The stumbling block was that most foundations did not fund periodicals as a matter of policy. However, when she put together the training of women along with the expansion of New Directions for Women as a tool for education, the Ford Foundation approved a three-year grant totaling about $60,000. It was for a subscription campaign among minority women and to strengthen our financial position. Utilizing the grant, the publication was sent free to women in prisons and mental institutions as well as to university women's centers and women's clinics.

During Scheinmann's regime, a successful contribution campaign was carried on through ads in the paper requesting tax-deductible donations. Several premiums were pictured: a see-through bubble umbrella with the New Directions for Women logo for a $25 contribution, a canvas tote bag with the logo for $35, a pen on a marble stand engraved with either the logo or the donor's name for $50, a zippered leather case with 10 carpentry tools and the logo for $100, and a collapsible director's chair with steel frame and canvas seat and back for $500.

For the January/February 1982 issue, the trustees revised the "Statement of Purpose" to reflect the coming of age of the Second Wave of the feminist movement:

> New Directions for Women is committed to publishing the many voices of feminism. We believe the diversity of the women's movement must be seen as one of its strengths.
> New Directions for Women is a national feminist periodical written for feminists and committed to reaching out to those not yet dedicated to a feminist future.
> New Directions for Women believes when we understand the pervasive force of sexism, we will act to effect change.

In addition to a strong book review section for adult and children's and young adult books and broad coverage of women in the arts, the paper covered, among other feminist issues, child abuse, domestic violence, prostitution, rape, homophobia, sexuality, politics, and local and national feminist actions and events. Columns took up health, legal, employment, and tax issues affecting women.

Although it always provided a feminist perspective, the paper was never allied with any particular group within the women's movement and sought to offer a broad spectrum of opinion, particularly on controversial issues such as pornography.

In 1983, Vivian Scheinmann left the paper to open a feminist book store with Pamela Sheldrick, who had been doing the New Directions for Women layout for several years. The paper moved its offices to an old building in Englewood, New Jersey, renovated for the Women's Rights Information Center of Bergen County. Phyllis Kriegel, a graduate of the women's history program at Sarah Lawrence College, became managing editor. According to Kriegel, when she took over, the publication had an annual budget of $43,000 compared to an annual budget of $157,000 in its final year. The increase reflected Kriegel's decisions to compensate staff members and contributors.

"We started to pay the staff in the mid-1980s, and in the late 1980s we started to pay writers (who got two cents a word), artists and photographers," she said in an interview in 1995. Although no one was ever employed more than part-time, "we were paying out an added cost of $1,000 per issue," she said. "We felt we could no longer ask women to be volunteers on a continuing basis. The times had changed. A lot of good writers we wanted wanted a token that they were professionals, and we honored that," she explained.

Even though articles were written by professionals, "We were careful to make the copy tight and lively," Kriegel commented. Unlike some other feminist newspapers that run submissions word for word, "We felt we had a literary and grammatical standard. We cared passionately about writing and how it sounded."

Kriegel said she contributed her own funds to hire a staff and to "help leverage other funds." Some years, she said, she gave a significant amount—$25,000 to $30,000. It was my life and I was delighted that I could do it."

By 1993, New Directions for Women had a readership of some 65,000 (a combination of paid and free distribution) and was a nationally and internationally recognized and respected agent of social change. Its size had grown to between 44 and 48 pages, with up-to-date style and professional design and layout by computer. This was accomplished, in part, by grants from the Ms. Foundation for Education and Communication, the Funding Exchange, ADCO Foundation, the Sophia Fund, North Star, the Foundation for a Compassionate Society, and the Harbach Foundation. But grants were sporadic and small. "A $2,000 to $3,000 grant for us was handsome," Kriegel said.

NEW DIRECTIONS FOR WOMEN
Volume 20 Number 5 September/October 1991
through Volume 22 Number 5 Sept./Oct. 1993

One gift was more substantial. New Directions for Women was distributed internationally starting in 1989-90 through a $30,000 grant for two years from Genevieve Vaughan, a philanthropist. The grant financed an international pull-out section called "Country of Women" that ran for three years and included material from a women's newspaper in Italy on feminist conferences in Europe. The section featured a quotation from Virginia Woolf: "As a woman I have no country. As a woman I want no country. As a woman my country is the whole world." New Directions for Women had a correspondent in Eastern Europe at the time of the collapse of communism, reporting on its effects on women.

A "Twentieth Anniversary Benefit Concert" was produced in 1991 at Steinway Hall in New York City. The Mannes Trio (the all-woman trio in residence at the Mannes College of Music) donated its services for an evening of classical "Music by Great Woman Composers." After expenses, which were largely donated, the concert added $2,250 to the paper's coffers.

Under Kriegel's leadership New Directions for Women ran a valuable intern/co-op program, drawing students of diverse backgrounds from many colleges and universities who were then trained and supervised by staff. The program was valuable to the paper, to the students, and to the community. Many of the interns went on to work for social change in the Peace Corps, politics, religious organizations, city government, hospitals, and clinics, as well as in journalism with mainstream magazines, newspapers, and publishing houses.

Beset by rising production costs and falling subscriptions, which had declined to about 3,500, New Directions for Women was forced to fold with the September/October 1993 issue. (Subscription fulfillment was taken over by another fine feminist periodical, ON THE ISSUES.) The subscription price, held at $10 for most of Kriegel's tenure, was $18 a year at the time publication ceased. Kriegel, who had prepared a business plan at the request of a woman's foundation, decided to end the operation, which advertised a total circulation of 65,000 (because of free distribution) after she failed to get expected funding.

Under Kriegel's leadership the paper stressed more investigative journalism. "We were far ahead of other publications," Kriegel feels. "We had a wonderful issue on women in prisons in the early 1990s. We were the ones telling the story of the grassroots woman's movement at a time when people said it was dead. We tackled what feminist think tanks say about feminists. We wrote about women's funding sources, social change, women's health, women losing their children. That was part of the problem—people said reading it was a downer. We were bringing a lot of bad news."

The paper also regularly covered lesbians, peace activism, and spirituality. A New York Metro Area Supplement was added in 1989, and news from the Women's Action Coalition was carried regularly starting early in 1993.

Kriegel believes lack of promotion led to the demise. "We never had enough money or talent to get on radio programs and be visible. I couldn't do it and run the paper," she said. "Book advertising was the largest source of advertising [and] we went up to $5,000 an issue in ads." Tying into editorial themes, the publication solicited advertising for issues on special topics like women's history, black history, and women's spirituality." Yet New Directions for Women lacked local circulation and, consequently, failed to attract local advertising.

Another problem was its newspaper format. Even though its bimonthly publication schedule made it hard to cover news events, "We attempted to be timely," Kriegel said. "We were a news magazine." Kriegel believes a gap has been left in the media since New Directions for Women went under.

But New Directions for Women will have a lasting influence on its staff, its writers, and on the changed lives and minds of its readers.

Almost unbearably touching were the many letters received after our final issue. A few excerpts: "Oh woe, alas—such sad news. I can only imagine what the loss is to you, for us it is a cruel cut indeed." "I wept when I read your letter yesterday. You have been friends of long-standing to me (collective 'you') for all the years as I read and watched New Directions evolve and become the excellent publication that it was." "It just breaks my heart to see such a wonderful periodical run out of funds and have to stop publishing." "No words I can think of will say what I felt when I read your letter about New Directions for Women lying down to rest. It's been a good friend for so long I never considered living without it." "For me your closing the windows is a cause for mourning. You have opened the many windows to the world's women for me. You have been my companion." "From my selfish perspective I'm grateful that you were around during the years I was most isolated in Topeka and New Directions for Women was my lifeline."

New Directions for Women has published two cumulative indexes of its complete contents: the Ten Year Cumulative Index of Volume 1 Number 1 through Volume 10 Number 6 (January 1972 through November/December 1981), and the Twelve Year Cumulative Index of Volume 11 Number 1 through Volume 22 Number 5 (January/February 1982 through September/October 1993, the final issue.)

The first index was compiled entirely by volunteers, with printing and binding donated by a major New Jersey corporation. Compiling the second index was partly paid work but mostly volunteer. Printing, binding and marketing funds were raised with a letter to New Directions for Women's loyal supporters.

Arranged chronologically by subject, the indexes provide a running account of feminist actions, philosophies, and feelings, issue by issue, year by year. Hundreds of articles are listed in the indexes under more than one subject to facilitate research on every aspect of the movement. In the first index there are 131 subject headings, 52 subject cross-references, listing of over 600 reviewed books (adult, children's, and young adult), over 300 advertisers in New Directions for Women, profiles of almost 50 feminist organizations, over 100 biographical profiles.

The second index adds many subjects that surfaced since 1981, such as: Addictions, AIDS, Backlash, Courts, Disabilities, Homelessness, Hunger, Incest, Peace Activism, Spirituality. There are 34 additional subject headings, 1900 book reviews, over 100 articles on women's health, 150 on international affairs, over 750 articles and reviews of Women in the Arts, including the performing arts, 120 biographical profiles, over 650 advertisers in New Directions for Women. The work of over 1000 writers and almost 500 graphic artists appeared in New Directions for Women during these twelve years.

Both indexes include the columns and regular features, such as: Media Watch, Women in the Arts, Equal Pay, Your Legal Problems, International Round-up and Country of Women, the Metro Section, Keeping Tabs on Our Health, Editorials, Calendars.

We believe this is the only cumulative index by subject of the many issues of the women's movement as they were documented by a feminist periodical. Evidence that the indexes are used rests on the several hundreds of dollars in royalties New Directions for Women is still receiving from University Microfilm International.

The archives of New Directions for Women—virtually the complete contents of all our files—are being deposited in the National Women and Media Collection at the University of Missouri School of Journalism in Columbia, Missouri, where these records will afford valuable insight into the workings of feminist journalism.

SO THE LEGACY OF New Directions for Women WILL LIVE ON.

When we started our feminist newspaper in 1971, we didn't realize we would be running a business, unbelievable as that seems to us today. In the 22 years we managed to keep publishing, we did a remarkable job of learning all the aspects of the business, but we never had the time, energy, funds—or inclination—to do all the necessary publicity and circulation promotion. Putting out the next issue always came first. And that is what finally brought us to our downfall in 1993.

We offer, to those who come after us, this detailed history of why we started and how we learned to become the most successful feminist newspaper in the country (called by Magazines for Libraries "the leading feminist newspaper in the United States"). Just as important to understand are the factors that thwarted us throughout our long history and that ultimately led to our demise as a publishing venture.

We hope that this chronicle of New Directions for Women will encourage, not dispirit, women who may be contemplating a new feminist periodical or are now publishing one. We hope that others will be inspired by the idealism that inspired us, by the conviction that accurate, in-depth coverage of women's lives and feminist issues as they surface and develop is possible only in a woman-run newspaper.
